Coding for MIMO Communication Systems Tolga M. Duman,Ali Ghrayeb,2008-03-11 Coding for MIMO Communication Systems is a comprehensive introduction and overview to the various emerging coding techniques developed for MIMO communication systems The basics of wireless communications and fundamental issues of MIMO channel capacity are introduced and the space time block and trellis coding techniques are covered in detail Other signaling schemes for MIMO channels are also considered including spatial multiplexing concatenated coding and iterative decoding for MIMO systems and space time coding for non coherent MIMO channels Practical issues including channel correlation channel estimation and antenna selection are also explored with problems at the end of each chapter to clarify many important topics A comprehensive book on coding for MIMO techniques covering main strategies Theories and practical issues on MIMO communications are examined in detail Easy to follow and accessible for both beginners and experienced practitioners in the field References at the end of each chapter for further reading Can be used with ease as a research book or a textbook on a graduate or advanced undergraduate level course This book is aimed at advanced undergraduate and postgraduate students researchers and practitioners in industry as well as individuals working for government military science and technology institutions who would like to learn more about coding for MIMO communication systems

Comparison of Four Methods of Encoding Elevation

Information with Complex Line-inclination Symbols David B. Learner,Earl A. Allusi,1957 The use of a one or two line inclination code has been found in previous experiments conducted under this contract to be an effective method for encoding from 10 to about 32 possible categories of information For some purposes however a much larger alphabet of symbols is required This study was a preliminary investigation of the psychological feasibility of employing coding schemes based on complex line inclination symbols for encoding information such as elevation that may require as many as 50 unique symbol categories Four groups of 20 subjects each decoded elevation information that had been encoded by the use of four different coding ensembles Each group worked with a different one of the four codes The four ensembles were called the binary the decimal the wheel and the clock codes The first three of these were based on the same type of stimulus symbol eight lines radiating at 45 degree angular separations from a central hub whereas the clock code was based on a stimulus symbol consisting of a circle and two lines each of which could be discretely positioned to correspond to the hour positions of a clock The decimal and clock codes were decoded with greater speed than the wheel and binary codes The wheel code was inferior to the other three codes with regard to accuracy These data are regarded as another demonstration of S R compatibility effects and of the importance of considering both the alphabet and the readout in selecting an S R ensemble for encoding any specific type of information The present results were obtained with subjects who had undergone less than one hour of practice in reading the specific code used by their group but with displays that were oriented in fixed positions relative to the subjects Although the two best of the four codes employed should undergo further study before being used for encoding elevation information the data of this study indicate that they are psychologically feasible for such use Abstract
