The New Agrarianism Eric T. Freyfogle,2001-09 The engaging writings gathered in this new book explore an important but little publicized movement in American culture the marked resurgence of agrarian practices and values in rural areas suburbs and even cities It is a movement that in widely varied ways is attempting to strengthen society s roots in the land while bringing greater health to families neighborhoods and communities The New Agrarianism vividly displays the movement s breadth and vigor with selections by such award winning writers as Wendell Berry William Kittredge Stephanie Mills David Orr Scott Russell Sanders and Donald Worster As editor Eric Freyfogle observes in his stimulating and original introduction agrarianism is properly conceived in broad terms as reaching beyond food production to include a wide constellation of ideals loyalties sentiments and hopes It is a temperament and a moral orientation he explains as well as a suite of diverse economic practices all based on the insistent truth that people everywhere are part of the land community as dependent as other life on its fertility and just as shaped by its mysteries and possibilities The writings included here have been chosen for their engaging narratives as well as their depiction of the New Agrarianism s broad scope Many of the selections illustrate agrarian practitioners in action restoring prairies promoting community forests and farms reducing resource consumption reshaping the built environment Other selections offer pointed critiques of contemporary American culture and its market driven resource depleting competitiveness Together they reveal what Freyfogle identifies as the heart and soul of the New Agrarianism its yearning to regain society s connections to the land and its quest to help craft a more land based and enduring set of shared values The New Agrarianism offers a compelling vision of this hopeful new way of living It is an essential book for social critics community activists organic gardeners conservationists and all those seeking to forge sustaining ties with the entire community of life PC Magazine ,2001 Industrial Bulletin New York (State).
