Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders between two groups of nurses working in different departments of a hospital. The study was conducted in a tertiary care hospital in the United States. A cross-sectional survey was conducted using a self-administered questionnaire. The questionnaire included demographic information, work history, and a series of questions related to musculoskeletal symptoms and risk factors. The results showed that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was significantly higher among nurses working in the intensive care unit compared to those working in the medical-surgical department. The findings suggest that interventions aimed at reducing musculoskeletal risk factors may be beneficial for nurses working in high-risk environments.
