their own safe islands towards danger and death and first cast anchor at Albany Western Australia a pleasant old fashioned spot The little force consisted of one brigade of Mounted Rifles a Brigade of Infantry and one Brigade of Artillery and there at the south western point of the neighbouring continent they joined the 1st Australian Division and headed under convoy for Egypt arriving at Alexandria early in December On the formation of Birdwood s Corps a brigade of Australian Light Horse and a brigade of Australian Infantry were incorporated with them to form what was known as the New Zealand and Australian Division This formation was trained under General Godley at Zeitoun till April 1915 during which time a small portion of the New Zealand Brigade took part in the repulse of the Turkish attack on the Suez Canal in February Both Sir John Maxwell and General Godley assured me at the time of my inspection in March that the behaviour of the New Zealanders during this trying period of straining at the leash was in every way excellent Soon after my inspection the last stage of the journey was begun and leaving the mounted troops behind them the infantry and artillery took ship and set sail for Mudros There for the short time remaining to them they worked very hard at rowing embarking disembarking but no veterans have ever done better than they did during those first few hours Then it was that they carried occupied and held under steadily increasing shell and machine gun fire what was afterwards known as Plugge s Plateau from Lieut Colonel

Plugge commanding the Auckland Battalion and Walker's Ridge from Brigadier General Walker General Birdwood's Chief of Staff who commanded the New Zealand Infantry Brigade at the Landing in the absence of Brigadier General Earl Johnston sick These are the prosaic facts of a feat of arms which will endure as long as heroic poetry and history are written or read
