

My Mother Said I Never Should is a play in three acts by Charlotte Keatley, directed by Michael Attenborough and Brigid Larmour

My Mother Said I Never Should was written in 1985 and was first produced at the Contact Theatre in Manchester on 25 February 1987. A revised edition premiered at the Royal Court Theatre on 23 February 1989 and in a recent revival premiered on 29 September 2009 at the Watford Palace Theatre. The play made a welcome return to the North West when The Dukes [\[1\]](#) in Lancaster produced My Mother Said I Never Should in February 2010.

This play is about the difficult relationships between mothers and daughters and explores the themes of independence, growing up and secrets. A story which explores the lives and relationships of four generations of women: Doris, Margaret, Jackie and Rosie. Their loves, expectations, and choices are set against the huge social changes of the twentieth century. When Jackie falls pregnant with Rosie, without a husband, she is unable to cope and hands over the baby to her mother, Margaret. The play looks at the consequences of this secret and each woman's opinion on it. The play has a minimalistic set and is deliberately unrealistic. One of the most unrealistic things in the play is the wasteground scenes where all characters become children. In these scenes, Doris becomes the youngest child at 5, with Rosie at 8 and Jackie and Margaret both 9. Some viewers have said that "it works backwards on itself which can get rather confusing." The scenes do not follow in chronological order, so in one scene Margaret will be a young child during the war being comforted by her mother Doris and in the next Jackie will be a child visiting her grandma Doris. This can also be slightly confusing because it is not specifically mentioned how old the characters are in each scene, but mostly it is very self-explanatory.

The main themes of the play are relationships and motherhood. It addresses the issues of teenage pregnancy, career prioritisation and single motherhood. It is also about how the different generations break free from their parents' traditions and culture.

Margaret is caught in the middle in between her mother and her daughter, Jackie, who had a daughter (Rosie) despite being unmarried.

One of the great success stories of modern British theatre, Charlotte Keatley's award-winning My Mother Said... was premiered in 1987 and has since been translated into 22 languages. Eighteen years later the play, although very much of its era, never comes across as a period piece; under the direction of Sarah Punshon this story of mother/daughter relationships, played out against the backdrop of women's emancipation, is as touching and funny as ever.

Doris Partington (Deirdre Doone), born illegitimate in 1900, abandons her promising teaching career for marriage and motherhood in 1924. After the war her daughter Margaret (Janice McKenzie) marries an American and becomes the mother of Jackie (Suki Smith), an archetypal 60s rebel. When Jackie falls pregnant whilst at university and is unable to cope with life as a single mother, she and Margaret decide that young Rosie (Katie Wimpenny) will be brought up as Margaret's own daughter and not told the truth about her parentage until her sixteenth birthday. Needless to say, all does not go to plan; Margaret's untimely death brings the secret out into the open too soon, and instead of the hoped-for mother and child reunion Rosie chooses to live with her great-grandmother.
