Re: Autonomous Mode Disengagements for Reporting Year 2019

To Whom It May Concern:

Pursuant to California Code of Regulations, Title 13, Article 3.7, § 227.46, Tesla, Inc. ("Tesla" or the "Company"), submits for the preceding reporting year (December 1, 2018, to November 30, 2019) (hereinafter, the "Reporting Year 2019") a summary of disengagements of autonomous mode in Tesla's autonomous vehicles ("AVs") that participated in the Autonomous Vehicle Tester Program ("AVT") administered by the California Department of Motor Vehicles (the "DMV").

For Reporting Year 2019, Tesla briefly tested an autonomous vehicle in autonomous mode on public roads in California. In April, we operated one vehicle in autonomous mode to record one demo run on a 12.2-mile route around Tesla's Palo Alto headquarters. The route covered surface streets and highways. We did not experience any autonomous mode disengagements during this run and, as a result, do not have any disengagements to report for Reporting Year 2019.

For background on how Tesla develops software capability, first, using industry best practices, we perform hardware and software in-the-loop testing, system-level and regression testing, simulations, test track and/or on-road testing (not autonomous), and a battery of cross-functional reviews, hazard analysis, risks assessments, and failure modes and effects analysis. Second, we rely heavily on fleet learning. Tesla is the only participant in the AVT program with a fleet of customer-owned vehicles in the hundreds of thousands. Virtually all customers consent to Tesla running developmental feature software, including for AV capability, in "shadow mode" during their normal driving operation. Features in "shadow mode" run silently in the background without actuating any vehicle controls whatsoever, which enables Tesla to test how features will perform in real-world driving conditions before we deploy them to the customer fleet. As a result, we are able to collect billions of miles of anonymized driving data remotely over the air, including on targeted roadways and in driving situations that we later use to train AV features to perform safely, consistently, and predictably.

This holistic approach allows Tesla to continuously improve Autopilot today as much as it allows us to develop AV features for tomorrow. As you know, Autopilot is our advanced driver-assistance system
