COLLAPSE MARKS

1. The first step in the process of collapse marks is to identify the areas of the structure that are most likely to experience high stress concentrations. These areas are typically located at the corners, edges, and joints of the structure. Once these areas have been identified, the next step is to apply a series of marks to the structure that will indicate the location and magnitude of the stress concentrations. These marks are typically made using a special type of ink or paint that is designed to be highly visible and durable. The marks are then applied to the structure in a series of concentric circles, with the size of the circles indicating the magnitude of the stress concentration. The final step in the process is to analyze the marks and determine the areas of the structure that are most likely to experience failure. This is typically done by comparing the marks to a set of reference marks that have been previously established.
