Personality Assessment in the DSM-5 Steven K. Huprich, Christopher J. Hopwood, 2014-10-29 The DSM 5 promises to be a major reformulation of psychopathology and no section is likely to change diagnostic practice more than that of personality pathology Unlike the DSM IV the DSM 5 personality disorders will be conceptualized as involving core deficits in interpersonal and self functioning and will utilize a hybrid assessment model involving both pathological trait dimensions and a limited set of personality disorder types These changes are based on empirical and theoretical work conducted during the era of DSM III IV but nevertheless there is significant disagreement among personality assessors regarding the DSM 5 proposal In this volume several members of the DSM 5 work group offer rationales for the proposal and offer empirical evidence regarding suggested changes and several personality assessment researchers critique the proposal and offer alternative conceptualizations This book was originally published as a special issue of the Journal of Personality Assessment

Evaluating the Assessment and Clinical Application of the DSM-5 Section III Personality Disorder Model Jaime L. Anderson, 2016 The Diagnostic and Statistical Manual for Mental Disorders 5th Edition DSM 5 American Psychiatric Association APA 2013 includes an alternate model for the assessment and diagnosis of personality disorders PDs This model is a hybrid dimensional categorical model that includes functional impairment maladaptive personality traits and a set of categorical PD diagnoses Previous research has begun to evaluate the different aspects of this model particularly its trait model see Krueger however additional research is needed that addresses the clinical utility of the model the role of functional impairment in PD assessment and validity of measure designed to assess the model e.g. the Personality Inventory for DSM 5 PID 5 and its alternate forms The following studies aimed to fill those gaps in the literature Study One evaluated clinical perspectives of Borderline BPD and Antisocial ASPD PDs using Section III dimensional traits and supported the use of these traits in operationalizing these two disorders in clinical practice Study Two examined the functional impairment criteria of the model as they relate to specific PDs This study suggested a lack of utility in measuring disorder specific impairment due to overlap across PDs and instead suggested the use of more broad constructs of impairment In addition however this study highlighted some of the overlap between functional impairment and maladaptive traits in this model as described by other previous researchers e.g. Zimmerman et al 2015 and called for additional research regarding the utility of this criterion Finally Study Three evaluated a screening measure for the Section III trait domains the PID 5 Brief Form PID 5 BF APA 2013 Derringer et al under review This study found support for the factor structure of this measure as well as its construct validity as measured by its association with relevant external criterion variables Although more research continues to be needed regarding the use of this alternative model these studies have implications for its implementation and generally support the use of dimensional traits in the assessment and diagnosis of personality psychopathology
