Chapman, Carol A. Carrier, 1990-03-20 The challenge facing the education system in many countries of meeting demands for higher quality public education within increasingly severe national economic and fiscal constraints is the subject of this collection of essays by eleven outstanding educational practitioners The book examines national level strategy for improving the quality of education It identifies and analyzes key interventions to improve educational quality Strategies for selecting among these interventions are discussed and the major issues encountered in implementing the interventions are analyzed A major argument of the book is that a systems approach offers the most effective and efficient intervention for improving education quality but only when sufficient attention is paid to the motivation knowledge and behavior of the individuals within those systems on whose actions success of any intervention ultimately depends Part I Improving Educational Quality contains five chapters and provides a general framework for formulating interventions to improve educational quality Included here are discussions of investments that lead to student achievement the use of efficiency as a criterion to judge the effects of education investments ways instructional systems models enhance efficiency and educational quality and the role played by donors The nine chapters that compose Part II Issues in Implementing Quality Improvement Programs discuss a series of issues more specifically concerned with program implementation These are organized in three categories 1 the teacher's role in quality improvement 2 monitoring evaluation and data management and 3 instructional delivery While the volume is written to assist instructional designers program planners administrators evaluators and supervisory personnel it has wide application as a text for graduate students preparing for these types of positions International Who's Who of Professionals Carrie J.
