then portioning it out to grab and go meals for later. If you've ever kept your leftovers from dinner to take with you for lunch, then extend this to your very little mini meal prepped. Generally, though, meal prepping refers to preparing 3-7 days' worth of food at a time. Think of it like keeping your lunches for the week all at once instead of keeping your lunch hours running. You can use this same technique for breakfast, lunch, dinner, and snacks. Meal prepping isn't necessarily a waste and reduces time to the outside world, whether the plan is a diet or a budget. When keeping your regular day out of the question, meal planning will allow you to eat healthy meals without having to do it every day. Meal planning is not for everyone. With meal prepping, you generally eat the same thing for a few days in a row so that you don't eat leftovers or get bored with food. Meal prepping is not for you. If having a nutritionist or what you're maximizing your time and budget is more valuable to you than doing something different every day, meal planning is not for you. I've generally not seen a meal prep for the month or maybe one other person do a whole meal. Meal planning for a whole family would be quite difficult, but the more people involved, the more it would be a challenge. If food is stored in the refrigerator, it's a slow decline in quality. The length of time is acceptable, but the texture and flavor will be affected by the eater. Always begin with the refrigerator guidelines, but the FDA and then evaluate them against your own preferences. In general, I don't think it's more than a few days' worth at a time, but I find that because of the food quality, it's not ideal to do it.
