Digitalization of Medicine in Low- and Middle-Income Countries Zisis Kozlakidis,Armen Muradyan,Karine Sargsyan,2024-08-30 This open access book provides a framework to describe why digitalization of the medical provision services is needed and which level of digitalization is possible in low and middle income countries LMIC. These countries have traditionally been economically and technologically not ready for digitalization but with recent progress in digitized data acquisition machine learning and computing infrastructure healthcare applications are expanding into areas that were previously thought to be the exclusive domain of human experts. It is increasingly accepted that the transformation in healthcare would not be possible if it is not associated with technological innovations in communication computing and analytical processing of biological samples. However this need and development is quite different to what has been experienced in high income countries as by definition resource restricted settings have to navigate through a greater number of competing interests and needs and as such the context into which digital health needs to be adopted and operate varies greatly. For instance LMIC healthcare finds itself under a twin pressure of traditional healthcare pressures such as infectious diseases outbreaks and a growing elderly population with complex comorbidities and both these aspects need to be addressed simultaneously. Digitalization of Medicine in Low and Middle Income Countries Paradigm Changes in Healthcare and Biomedical Research provides in depth understanding of the root causes for the observed differences in digital healthcare implementation in LMICs. Creating a strong foundation of the current trends and perspectives of digital healthcare in general readers of this book are able to gain an informative account of how digital healthcare has been adapted to the different LMIC contexts in order to create demonstrable and impactful success stories.

Encyclopedia of Science and Technology Communication Susanna Hornig Priest,2010-07-14 The explosion of scientific information is exacerbating the information gap between richer poorer educated less educated publics. The proliferation of media technology and the popularity of the Internet help some keep up with these developments but also make it more likely others fall further behind. This is taking place in a globalizing economy and society that further complicates the division between information haves and have nots and compounds the challenge of communicating about emerging science and technology to increasingly diverse audiences. Journalism about science and technology must fill this gap yet journalists and journalism students themselves struggle to keep abreast of contemporary scientific developments. Scientist aided by public relations and public information professionals must get their stories out not only to other scientists but also to broader public audiences. Funding agencies increasingly expect their grantees to engage in outreach and education and such activity can be seen as both a survival strategy and an ethical imperative for taxpayer supported university based research. Science communication often in new forms must expand to meet all these needs. Providing a comprehensive introduction to students, professionals and scholars in this area is a unique challenge because practitioners in these fields must grasp both the principles of science and the principles of science communication while understanding the social contexts of each. For this reason science journalism and science communication are often addressed only in advanced undergraduate or graduate specialty courses rather than covered exhaustively in lower division courses. Even so those entering the field rarely will have a comprehensive background in both science and communication studies. This circumstance underscores the importance of compiling useful reference materials. The Encyclopedia of Science and Technology Communication presents resources and strategies for science communicators including theoretical material and background on recent controversies and key institutional actors and sources. Science communicators need to understand more than how to interpret scientific facts and conclusions; they need to understand basic elements of the politics, sociology and philosophy of science as well as relevant media and communication theory principles of risk communication, new trends and how to evaluate the effectiveness of science communication programmes to mention just a few of the major challenges. This work will help to develop and enhance such understanding as it addresses these challenges and more. Topics covered include advocacy, policy and research organizations, environmental and health communication, philosophy of science, media theory and science communication, informal science education, science journalism as a profession, risk communication theory, public understanding of science, pseudo science in the news, special problems in reporting science and technology, science communication ethics.
