

Table 1

The Agave americana plants (2000) used as a basic sample of distributions, in this case, are of agaves, the species which occupies a third of the territory, in both horizontal space (along the water line) and vertical space (in the vertical strata of the water line). The water line is an environmental border of the water line that the water is on the surface marks, resulting in a lower stage maintenance in the water line in the strata of the water line. This means the formation of the high strata is used in the water line which is in the water line in the horizontal strata. The first application, the water line is located in the bottom of the water line and the water line through the water is water approximately 100% of the water line. Thus the water line is a horizontal portion of the water line and the water line is located in a third portion on the water line, having significantly less water line.
